

We highly recommend that these saddlebags be fit to your bike before painting them. The saddlebags may require modifications or may be incompatible with your bike. Making these modifications after the saddlebags have been painted could result in damage to the new paint finish. Moreover, if the saddlebags are incompatible with your motorcycle, painting them will be unnecessary; and we will be unable to reimburse for the painting or issue a refund for the saddlebags.

In an effort to exceed your expectations, we photograph your saddlebags before shipping them to you.

We know that many of our customers either ship their saddlebags directly to a body shop or take them there to be painted without opening the package first. A few of our customers have reported that their saddlebags have been mishandled and damaged by their body shops and that the shops were then reluctant to accept responsibility for their actions. Although it has not occurred often, if it happened once to one of our customers, then it happened one too many times. Therefore, before we ship your saddlebags, we give them a thorough inspection and take numerous pictures of them. Then, along with your sales invoice, we keep these photographs on file. We do this for your protection.

Should there ever be a question about the condition of your saddlebags at the time of shipping, please contact us. We have photographic proof that they were shipped in perfect condition.
